Gain Seen In U.S. Economy

Indicators Up, But Deficit in Trade Widened

By Jane Seaberry

WASHINGTON — The govern-ment's main gauge of future U.S. economic activity rose 0.7 percent last month, following two months of declines, suggesting that Federal Reserve Board action earlier this by year may be succeeding in pulling the economy out of its slump.

But other figures released Friday showed that the U.S. deficit in merchandise trade widened again.

Despite the improvement in the Despite the improvement in an index of Leading Economic Indi-lators. Commerce Secretary Mal-colm Baldrige cautioned that the increase was not enough to make the economy grow at the rate needed to keep the U.S. budget deficit from growing. The Reagan administration has been anticipating that the economy would expand enough to keep a lid on the deficit.

The Commerce Department reported that the index rose nearly across the board in May after a revised 0.6-percent decline in April and a revised 0.1-percent drop in March.

Although economists said Fri-day that it looked like a rebound was occurring, they cautioned that would be less than dramatic and that growth would still be far below the 4 percent anticipated by the Reagan administration.

The Commerce Department also reported Friday that the U.S. defi-cit in merchandise trade widened in May to $12.67 billion, the second highest ever, from $11.85 billion in Fig. 5 April. The May figure was the larg-

U.S. Plans New Security Measures At Airports, Including More Searches

By Herbert H. Denton

Tax Cut Helped Americans' Incomes Rise in '83 tion's 85 million households averaged

By Spencer Rich

Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — The after-tax income of the average American household rose sharply in 1983 to $20,001, with a major assist from President Ronald Reagan's 1981 in-come tax cut, the U.S. Census Bureau has

A study released Thursday showed that, contrary to a popular impression, the elderly have a higher per-capita income than most other age groups.

It also showed that only 7.6 percent of households below the government-set poverty line in 1983 ($10,178 for a family of four) paid federal income tax, but about two-fifths of them paid Social Security or property taxes. Social Security provides retirement benefits and disability payments.

The report is the fourth in a series of studies trying to determine how much cash income American households have left after deducting payments for four major taxes: federal income tax, state income tax, Social Security payroll taxes and property taxes. The study reported that in 1983 the na$25,401 in gross income, paid an average of $5,400 in taxes (21 percent), and ended up with after-tax income of $20,001. A household is defined as one or more persons. [Although no exact comparable statistics were available for other Western nations, the Paris-based Organization of Economic Cooperation and Development said that figures for other major industrialized nations were far [A official at the organization's headquarters said the average 1983 net income for a family of four, including family benefits, was $11,105 in Japan, $10,793 in West Germany, $9,630 in Britain and $8,109 in France. However, the OECD total for the United States, using the same basis, was $14,338.]

Compared with 1982, income before taxes

- in constant dollars after accounting for inflation - rose 1.2 percent. But after-tax income rose 24 percent, showing that tax changes had a clear effect.

The bureau said that the major reason after-tax income rose more was the 1981 tax cut, which reduced federal income tax rates about 10 percent. Not all the savings were pocketed because state income taxes and Social Security taxes went up, but there was enough left to account for higher after-tax income per household. An overall 21 percent was paid for the four types of taxes included in the study, compared with 22 percent in 1982 and 23 percent in 1981. The study showed that on a per-capita basis, which takes into account the number of people in different types of homes, households headed by persons of age 65 or over had a per person income after taxes of $8,113. This is higher than any age group up to age 50 but slightly lower than age groups 50-54 ($8,614),.55-59 ($8,996) and 60-64 ($8,961). According to the report, white households, with $20,751 after-tax income, were financially far better off than the households of blacks ($13,673) or Hispanics ($16,076). Among family groupings, households con-sisting of women with children but no husband were at the bottom of the range: $11,302, less than half the figure for married

Marching Protestants Clash With Ulster Police

BELFAST - Police have clashed with Protestants who tried to march through a Roman Catho-lic town in Northern Ireland in defiance of a government ban.

More than 20 police were injured, seven persons were arrested and an unspecified number of reporters were assaulted late Thursday as members and supporters of Protestant marching bands set out on their annual parade through Castlewellan in County Down. The town is 95 percent Catholic.

The government earlier had banned Protestant parades through Catholic areas. Irish nationalists in the Catholic minority bitterly re-sent the marches, which celebrate loyalty to Britain.

Protestants believe that the ban was issued because of pressure from the republic of Ireland, which is holding talks with Britain on pos-sible reforms in Northern Ireland to end 15 years of civil unrest.

One of the more sensitive issues under discussion is a possible role for Dublin in running the province. Among the proposals are shared security operations, joint courts to try guerrillas and joint parliamentary sessions.

The Protestants have been wary of such changes, fearing that they could lead eventually to reunification with Ireland.

On Thursday, about 500 police officers in riot gear sealed off all roads to Castlewellan, a town of March, the two sides have differed 1.500 people. A police spokesman said the show of strength was insharply on how to approach the three-part negotiations on limiting tended as a warning to Protestants who have threatened to defy the ban on marching.

Poland's Meat Prices to Rise Monday

WARSAW (Reuters) — Poland's government announced Friday its plans to increase meat prices on Monday despite widespread public opposition, including calls for a strike.

The date of the increases was announced on the state-run television system's evening news broadcast, along with an announcement that an increase in purchase prices paid to farmers would result in more food on

Calls for a strike included a statement by activists of the outlawed Solidarity trade union in Warsaw's biggest industrial plants. It said: "Preparations for a strike in response to meat price rises have been discussed and methods of swift communications have been agreed in case the strike action were to be prolonged."

Curbs Reported on Ex-Czech Aide

VIENNA (Reuters) - The former Czechoslovak foreign minister, Jiri Hajek, has been placed under strict around-the-clock surveillance to prevent him meeting foreigners, emigré sources said Friday.

The sources said Mr. Hajek, foreign minister in the Prague Spring era under Alexander Dubcek, was being followed closely by the secret police to prevent him from meeting members of a French parliamentary delegation currently in Czechoslovakia.

They said that the authorities feared that Mr. Hajek, a former spokesman of the Charter 77 human rights movement, might try to put the case of his son Jan to the French delegation. Over the past three years, Jan Hajek has been barred from studying at Prague University and has not been allowed to accept invitations to study in Austria and Norway.

Denmark Dissents on EC Car Exhaust

LUXEMBOURG (Reuters) - Denmark prevented the European Community from reaching unanimous agreement Friday on emission standards for automobiles, arguing that the proposals were too lenient. After a 21-hour session, the other nine member nations agreed on levels for toxic exhaust gases, diplomats said. The compromise proposed by the EC's Executive Commission proposes a combined maximum level of eight grams (.28 ounces) of nitrogen oxide, the most dangerous pollutant.

Commission officials said that Denmark would be under strong pressure to compromise. Britain also agreed during talks to drop legal moves to block West Germany's proposal to grant fiscal incentives to buyers of "clean" cars, diplomats said. In another concession, the commission promised Greece that it would take emergency measures if pollution in Athens exceeded certain levels.

Sun Belt's Glory Days

Give Way to Northeast The New England and Middle Atlantic states as far south as Maryland are enjoying the big-gest long-term boom in the Unit-ed States, The New York Times reports.

Historically, the region's revitalization is rooted in the entire country's shift away from smokestack to high-technology and service industries. In the Northeast, the decline of manufacturing began earlier, and now is more near-ly complete, than in other parts of the country.

What was left by the end of the 1970s was a region with thou-sands of skilled but unemployed workers and industrial real estate crying for new tenants, but a wealth of leading universities and well-established transportation

In 1975 the unemployment rate in Massachusetts was 11.2 per-cent, the highest in the country. Now it is 3.9 percent, the lowest. Other states in the region cite similar statistics. "The glory days of the Sun Belt are over," said William S. Woodside, chairman of the American Can Company in Greenwich, Connecticut. "It took a long time for the Northeast to get its act together, but it has done it now in a magnificent way."

Spy Detectors Unlimited

The House of Representatives has approved, 333-71, a measure that many of the 333 and most of the 71 knew could not achieve its goal. The measure was a broad grant of authority to the Pentagon to administer lie exist to classify far too much material as secret detector tests. The goal is to detect spies before and to clear far too many people to see it. This they can do the kind of damage alleged to have makes protection of real secrets more difficult. been done in the Walker case. But Congress must think harder about the means.

It is accepted that lie detector tests have some role in keeping secrets. The Central Intelligence Agency and National Security Agency routinely administer them to their employees, and to an extent that cannot be known the tests, or the threat of tests, may have prevented some spying. Polygraph test-ing, its proponents admit, is less than 100 percent reliable. Lie detectors detect not lies but stress. Skillful liars, presumably including some spies, can fool the machines. The results of the tests are not admissible in court.

So the weapon the House proposes to rely on is faulty; moreover, its aim is imprecise. What is needed is not authority for fallible new methods to test four million Pentagon and defense-contractor employees, but a focus on the far smaller number with access to impor-

One suggestion is to use a method applied by the Office of Management and Budget in domestic government: put hard limits on the number of employees to be granted security clearances and on the amount of material to be classified. This would cause a lot of grossing and might lead to some wrong decisions. But under the present system a man such as John Walker Jr., with access to genuine secrets, evidently escaped all scrutiny from the time he first was granted his clearance until he finally was implicated by family members. Authorizing the already overworked Pentagon security apparatus to give lie detector tests to four million people blurs any focus on the much number of potential spies.

The Cattle Show Begins

Has the 1988 presidential campaign already begun? Sad to say, there is evidence it has. The first votes are to be cast at the Republican county conventions in Michigan in January 1988. Already potential candidates are scouring Michigan for support. But the deadline is even earlier than it seems, for the 10,000 pre-cinct delegates entitled to vote at the state's 83 county conventions are to be elected in the August 1986 primary. To get your name on the ballot as a candidate for precinct delegate, you have to file signatures with the clerk in June 1986 - less than a year from now.

This deadline transformed last weekend's Republican Midwest leadership conference in Grand Rapids, Michigan, into the first cattle show of the 1988 campaign. Trooping into the Amway Plaza, just across the river from the Gerald R. Ford Museum, were Vice President George Bush and Representative Jack Kemp. Senator Robert Dole and Former Governor Pierre du Pont of Delaware. We will spare you speculation about which candidate got the support of the Shiawassee County chairman. and how many judgeship hopefuls attended a reception for another candidate. Long before we can even guess the challenges that will face the next president, the campaign has begun.

Must we add that this is preposterously early? We are sympathetic to any state that is ready to challenge Iowa's and New Hampshire's claims to be the first to vote for president, and Michigan certainly is larger and arguably more typical of the nation than the other two. We suppose a focus on Michigan will force candidates to take blood oaths to help the auto industry, but then Iowa requires them to swear never to order a grain embargo. The greater defect here is giving the vote to people elected two years before a party's na-tional convention. This is one of those absurd features of the old system of presidential politics that the Democrats were wise enough to get rid of and the Republicans should not revive. If Michigan Republicans want to outflank their copartisans in lowa and New Hampshire, fine. Just let them begin their process in the same calendar year as the election, not two years before.

The Sabbath Decision

In striking down a Connecticut law that let any employee take off from work on his chosen Sabbath, the Supreme Court has drawn a useful line between yielding to the demands of religious interests and accommodating them. The decision gives hope that rulings like the approval of a city-sponsored Nativity display were momentary lapses from the rule of strict government neutrality on religious matters.

Connecticut's unusual law guaranteed every employee the right to designate a personal Sabbath. That forced employers to give them the day off, regardless of the effect on the business or on co-workers who did not invoke religious duty. The law was an innocent outgrowth of the Legislature's decision a decade ago to abolish Sunday closing laws. Understandably worried that devout Christians would be forced to work Sundays against their ll, and solicitous also of those who observe a different Sabbath, the Legislature let every employee make an individual choice of a guaranteed day of rest. But that forced some citizens to bend to others' religious demands. The 8-to-1 decision to this effect is encouraging because the court recently showed signs of looking for more ways to "accommodate" religion. Connecticut and the Justice Department argued that the state law was just such an accommodation, but the court correctly saw it as a religious command. As Chief Justice Warren Burger wrote, "Government must guard against activity that impinges on religious free-dom, and must take pains not to compel people to act in the name of any religion.

A truer model of accommodation lies in the federal civil rights law, which calls on employers "to reasonably accommodate" employee Sabbath preferences if that can be done "without undue hardship on the conduct of the employer's business. Americans do not always live up to their constitutional tradition of religious tolerance. They sometimes show insufficient regard for the religious sensibilities of others. But rigid laws like Connecticut's will not foster understanding, and they send the wrong message, of government partisanship. Neutrality best keeps faith with the Constitution.

Other Opinion

Slender Hopes for Milan

The outlook for [the European Community summit meeting in Milan is worse than it looked after the Brussels summit in March. Optimism over reform has waned and a whole string of other topics will cut into a 10-cornered discussion of only a few hours. The need for progress has grown visibly since Brussels. From next year when the Iberians join, there will be 12 viewpoints to reconcile; and there is growing pressure from America on a number of fronts such as the Strategic Defense Initiative and the threat of a food-dumping war. The acid test of the will to European unification remains majority voting. It entails the partial surrender of that national sovereignty which, in capitals like London, seems to gain in importance as its reality in the world of the superpowers shrivels before our eyes. In Milan, then, blessed are they who expect nothing for they shall not be disappointed. Hope, however, is free as usual.

Desperation in El Salvador

The terroristic machine-gun attack by guer-rillas that left 13 people dead — six of them Americans — at an outdoor San Salvador cafe is a savage act of desperation, more evidence that the leftist rebels are impatient with the lack of progress in their campaign to take over the country. Spraying gunfire into a crowd is not likely to win hearts or minds; it does inspire fear. Whether the terror was aimed at the American victims we cannot say. What is clear is that the world must not grow used to this terror. The terror must end, but never on the terrorists' terms.

1910: A Platform for U.S. Democrats LONDON - Thomas F. Ryan, New York financier, arrived here [on June 28]. To a Herald correspondent, Mr. Ryan said: "Business in the United States is good and if the politicians will let it alone the country will take care of itself. The Republican Party is breaking up. Were it not for Mr. [Theodore] Roosevelt's popularity with the masses the Democrats could elect a President in 1912. What would the issues be of the Democrats? First, stop making business subservient to political ambition; adjust the tariff in the interest of and for the benefit of all the American people instead of for a comparatively small number; rigid economy in the expenditures of the Government: upbuilding of the navy till it is superior to those of any two nations put together."

As Mr. Owsley's car, escorted by cavalry, approached the entrance to the castle at Cork Hill here, a group of Reds tried to rush it in order to shower the American envoy with leaflets demanding the release of Tom Moo-ney, the veteran labor leader imprisoned in California. While Mr. Owsley, former Minister to Romania, proceeded through the streets, other Communists passed among the crowds and distributed leaflets headed: "No welcome to Mr. Owsley! Release Tom Mooney!"

A Cornered Europe Shows a Will to Survive

PARIS — After a decade of dol-drums, members of the European Community are worried enough about their future to seek new momentum. Already, though, high expectations for this weekend's sum-mit meeting in Milan have sagged. There is not much chance yet of rewriting the Treaty of Rome into a much tighter charter for a real Enropean Union, as has been discussed for so long. More modest moves are likely to try to overcome the many remaining barriers to internal trade and to restrain the egotism of states. Still, there has been a change in the wind. For the first time in years, the issue among the leaders is not about extracting money from each other but about how to develop the great potential that Europe has but cannot pull itself together to use.

And for the first time, they will be a round dozen. Portugal and Spain do not become members until Jan. 1, but they will attend as observers. The Community is reaching its full proportions, 320 million people, more than the United States or the Soviet Union. The prospect is reviv-ing almost-forgotten hopes of creat-ing a vital new world power. By Flora Lewis

No one denies that the impetus is fear. It is the fear of proud nations, once masters of global empires, that they will be left behind to stagnate and founder in a fast-moving world. The danger of irreversible decline such as others have faced in history is seen looming ahead. For the Europeans, the spur is not the clanking, armor-plated So-viet Union. It is the innovative United States, hard-selling Japan, the busily productive countries that have moved from underdeveloped to highly competitive in a genera-tion. The fear is of missing the third Industrial Revolution. President Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative focused minds in a way he never intended and no one foresaw. It seems to foreshadow a vast new technological spurt to overtura economies. European interest in it is not about shooting down missiles, but about penetrating markets, saving jobs, keeping scientists. Whether they admit it or not, the French hope their Eureka project will mobi-lize Europeans for their own industrial purposes. Four big companies from four countries have just agreed to join in it. There is a long way for them to go, and they are coming to realize that that is precisely because they have failed to complete their Common Market. An American high-technology expert points out that European companies make 10 different types of telecommunications switches and spend a quarter of their programmers' time on it, when only two or three switches and less than half the time in a combined effort would mean profitability.

These facts of modern life inevitably collide with national politics, still chueging along at the old pace. The political tendency has been to look inward, to hold on to the bird in the hand and let those in the bush go their own way. A clear sign of the opposing tugs has come with the formation of the "Action Committee for Europe." It is a deliberate repetition of the committee established by the late Jean Monnet, who used it as a weapon to lobby, chivy and shove the Europeans into creating the EC.

The nostalgia is redolent. Some of the people are the same. The secretary is Max Kohnstamm, the venerable Dutchman who was a loyal Monnet aide. The formula is the same: leaders of labor, business and politics who are ready to use their influence behind scenes to move governments. They met in Bonn earlier this month and issued an appeal to the Milan summit con-

This is important. It creates a constituency for hard decisions. It is also revealing that businessmen and labor officials are much more strongly represented on the committee than politicians.

ference "to give back to the Community strength and confidence

These are the first signs that Europe is producing the will to pick itself up again, as it did after the war. The difficulties also show how hard it is for nations, even friendly ones, to cooperate for joint benefit. But they can when it is painfully clear that there is no other way. The future depends on seeing clearly be-fore there is too much pain.

Terror, Live at 5: Are the Media Part of the Problem?

A Want, a Need, to Know

T EWSPAPERS face a difficult task in dealing N with events such as the hijacking of TWA Flight 847. The terrorists goals include publicity for their causes and demands, but by their actions they are also making news, and people grab eagerly for details. Newspapers have had calls from read-ers who cannot wait for the next day's paper; other people keep their radios on all night.

The enormity of the deed has commandeered the public's attention; how could the media turn off the cameras, put away the microphones and tell reporters to step aside and wait patiently until the final act is over? The question answers itself.

We want to continue reading about what is happening, what is being done to bring the hos-tages' release. We want most of all to read that they are sale and ready to resume useful lives. Then we will want to know what is being done to the perpetrators, what is being done to prevent a repetition. But a blackout now, while it would turn off the klieg lights shining on the terrorists, would also deprive us of information about the welfare of the bostages, and this we need to know.

- Sam Zagoria, Washington Post ombudsman.

Distant, Useless Knowledge

MARSHALL McLUHAN observed that primitive peoples may be better equipped for the communications revolution than highly intellectual peoples. C.S. Lewis, who somehow was both highly intellectual and stubbornly primitive, refused to read newspapers. He was convinced that they unnaturally and banefully engage our sympa-thies on behalf of remote people we can do nothing to help. We were given the power of compassion in order to help our neighbors, he contended, and only frustrated our better selves by getting worked up over the fates of strangers beyond our power to assist. Lewis had a point. Why should so many of us be hanging on the TV for the latest interim report on a few dozen people we can't do anything for? Who benefits from this monstrous maldistribution of attention except the criminals? — Syndicated columnist Joseph Sobran.

Two Edges to the Sword HOW FAR should media self-discipline go? Should the press play censor at the source, and if so when? Should television blot out Nabih Berri's news conferences, or conceal the anguish of the hostages' families? Certainly Vietnam and Watergate discredited the assumption that govern-ment knows what it is doing and would do it well if only the press kept its big nose out of it. True, television is about as capable of selfdiscipline in its chase after good footage as a dog is in chasing a rabbit. True also, television changes the terms of political action and discussion. It has helped arm puny mini-states and terrorist rings with the capacity to disrupt the composure and injure the pride of great powers. But this nuisance capacity can be turned into a fundamental threat only by inflated talk, panic and overreaction.

Ithicl de Sola Pool of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology has observed that every new communications technology has aroused the cen-sorial instinct. But deference to the censors' fears is not, and should not be, the governing philosophy of the First Amendment to the Constitution. The Reagan administration has promoted a good deal of grumbling over TV coverage of the hostage crisis. But its "Mephistophelean bargain" with the tube (in Godfrey Hodgson's term) has been the most eager in our history. An administra-tion with so much faith in going, via television, over the heads of government and media middle-men to "the people" can hardly complain when the monster it usually strokes develops a bite.

- Syndicated columnist Edwin M. Yoder Jr.

For Greater Self-Restraint

WHY DO the networks cover terrorism the way they do? Largely for commercial reasons. Their coverage is driven by ratings, not news ment. Television executives understand that the public responds to the underlying tensions of bostage situations, but the situations themselves are fairly static after the first few days. Accordingly, there are few dramatic developments to tape ad put on the air. So the networks try to expand the news to fill the excessive time allotted. The need to fill air time has several unfortunate effects. It tends to exaggerate the importance of an event. And it may encourage dwelling on historical analogies that may be mainly false, such as the comparison being drawn between the current situ-ation and the Iranian hostage crisis.

Excessive and distorted coverage can frustrate policy-makers and limit their options. There was no good reason to allow Nabih Berri to appear regularly on network television, communicating his demands himself to the American public. The U.S. ambassador to Lebanon, Reginald Bartholomew, has had a particularly close relationship to Mr. Beni and could have negotiated with him in private - probably to much better effect. Some may argue that the real problem is the nature of terrorism, not the nature of television.

But there is no imperative in terrorism that dictates the kind and amount of television coverage it gets.

What would more responsible coverage look like? It would require a sense of perspective. It would be less extensive and repetitive and would give less air time to the terrorists themselves. It would also avoid interviews with so-called experts who second-guess the government and with family members who sometimes blurt out information that endangers their captive relatives.

Inspiring Needed Outrage

TOR AMERICANS, there is no escaping Hen-I ry Kissinger these days. Early in the morning, late at night, he is all over the networks, stamping his foot like Rumpelstiltskin, crying out his message of "no deals, no negotiations, no coverage" and retaliation when it's over. And like Rumpelstiltskin, he finally stamped so hard he put his foot through the floor. It happened the other night during an appearance with the talk-show host Ted Koppel. The former secretary of state was, once again, berating the news media for giving a platform to terrorists and hijackers, particularly in a news conference given by the Lebanese minister Nabih Berri that disintegrated into making heads about 100 males. disintegrated into rugby-field chaos.

"If the Nazis had invited networks to Auschwitz to watch people marching off to gas chambers, would it be appropriate news coverage to cover that?" he asked, opening up the floor beneath him. Had they had the chance, responded Mr. Koppel, the networks "absolutely" should have shown a necknown that the chance is not the chance. Anschwitz. The chances of a recession occurring in the near future have risen sharply. For the last year, the unemployment rate (now 7.3 percent) has been virtually motionless, and in September the current recovery will be 33 months old — the average duration of all recoveries since the end of World War II. Already a slowdown in the first half of 1985 has led most economic forecasters to reduce estimates of future growth.

No matter how the budget-cutting and tax-reform debates are resolved neither will be of much help in deal-ing with a stalled economy. Indeed, in the short run both factors could hurt. Cutting a deficit draws money out of circulation; doing it when exp nomic growth is slowing down could be a recipe for recession. The uncertainty caused by a long debate over tax-code revisions, coupled with the certainty that any significant reform will depress some sectors (such as housing), will also tend to dampen short-term economic growth. If a downturn does begin soon, the United States will be caught in a Catch-22 situation. Since World War II. Americans have been able to spend their way out of recessions including the last one — by increas-ing the deficit and lowering interest rates. But the high and persistent deficits of recent years have frightened the public, the press and most politicians into making deficit reduction the No. 1 economic policy goal. And the Federal Reserve Board insists on reducing the deficit before it will further lower interest rates.

Shower growth, which also slows tax revenues, is already creating a larger deficit. The growth in the gross national product for 1985 now predicted by top forecasters will add about $20 billion extra to the government's debt. To research the government's debt. ment's debt. To prevent the economy from tumbling into recession, interes rates will have to be lowered in the face of still higher deficits, or deficits will have to be deliberately increased further in order to put growing numbers of the jobiess back to work.

The difficulty is compounded by mushrooming trade problems. Singlest summer, industrial production has been stagnant while imports have siphoned off the market for goods. Despite the fall in interest rates, the dollar remains strong. And hopes that the United States could strest the erosion in its trade position by to baseball bats and telecommunications equipment have proved naive. Reaganomics has no answer for the trade delicit. Neither do the Demôcrats, who last year abandoned some promising industrial policy propos-als to help capital and labor become more competitive.

Finally, the banking system still totters. Debtor countries and their creditors averted disaster this year primarily by raising exports to the United States. But the trade balances of some of the largest - Argentina, Brazil, Mexico, Venezuela and others - are shrinking again. An economic downturn in America could wipe on those margins and plunge some of the most vulnerable debtor nations and the world financial structure into chaos. It could also wipe out a third of American savings and loan associ-ations, which are technically bankrupt or very close to bankruptey. trade balance, and the fragility of the banking system are all fundamental problems of economic management to which neither traditional liberals nor conservatives have satisfactory answers. Nor is the public being pre-pared for dramatic, perhaps Dracontan, measures that may be necessary when the next crisis hits.

Laissez-faire rhetoric notwithstanding bank bailouts show that Washington will expand its econom intervention when major institutions are threatened. Yet policy-makers are neither developing alternative strate-gies nor addressing the constitution-al, social and political issues that further interventions would raise.
While Mr. Reagan and the Dentacrais squabble over taxes and defi-cits, few leaders seem concerned with the larger issue of new growth.

Odd Couple in Asia: Sihanouk and Kim Il Sung

By John F. Burns New York Times Service PYONGYANG, North Korea — As Prince Norodom Sihanouk tells it, his friend came to him one day and said, "You've lost a coun-try, the least we can do is to build

you a house."
The friend was Kim II Sung, one of the most forbidding figures in the Communist world, and the house he built for the prince on a wooded hillside outside the North Korean capital was fit for a king. The prince, king of Cambodia as a teen-ager, and later prime minister and constitutional head of state, tells visitors that the 40room mansion in this austere workers' state is the grandest resiience he has ever had.

"I call it my palace," he says, breaking into the nervous laugh-ter that punctuates much of his

On the face of it, the politics of this region has produced few od-der couples than the prince, 63, and Mr. Kim, 72, his benefactor. Prince Sibanouk is a gentle-mannered aristocrat with a passion for French civilization. He is Buddhist who says of the Khmer Rouge, murderers of five of his children and 14 grandchildren, "I have to pardom,"

After 15 years under house ar-rest in Cambodia or in exile, either here or in Beijing, he remains an aesthete, immaculate in Paristailored pin stripes, partial to caviar and Champagne.

In addition to the mansion, Mr.
Kim has provided 100 Koreans to staff it, and a fleet of luxury cars are at the prince's call. There are also herty hard-currency expenses to be met for the prince's frequent overseas travels and even for his clothes. "It was not France which gave me this suit," the prince says.
"It was President Kim."

Then there are the lesser favors, the imported wines and foods, the sports hall near the artificial lake where the prince plays badminton with Pyongyang-based diplomais, the dances for the diplomatic corps at which the prince, manning the stereo, favors American

Mr. Kim, whom the prince re-fers to as "more than a friend, more than a brother," is a man who has rarely been called that outside the Communist world.

A peasant's son who took power when the Soviet Army arrived here in 1945, Mr. Kim, through his Korean Workers' Party, has imposed a chilling regimentation on his country's 18 million peo-ple. He has bolstered it with a personality cult that many believe even Stalin could not rival.

The "glorious and beloved leader," one of Mr. Kim's many titles, has been for 40 years a bitter enemy of much that Prince Sihanouk admires, including the United States.

The two men first met in 1965 at a gathering in Bandung, Indo-nesia, to commemorate the 10th anniversary of the movement professing nonalignment. Prince Si-hanouk recalls how President Sukarno, the host, placed the two leaders in adjoining suites in his palace and told them: "You are both nice men. I want you to be friends."

In 1970, Prince Sihanouk was deposed as ruler of Cambodia by pro-American generals who resented his neutralism during the Vietnam War. He later took up residence in Beijing.

Mr. Kim proposed that he make an additional home for himself in Pyongyang. In 1974, the North Korean leader built the mansion in the Jang Su Won hills north of the capital, a few miles beyond Mr. Kim's own headquarters. Since then, the prince and his wife, Princess Monique, have lived in the mansion for a few months each year, except from 1976 to 1979 when the Khmer Rouge placed them under house arrest in Phnom Penh.

The differences between the exiled prince and his host are reflected in the architecture. When Mr. Kim asked what kind of place he would like, the prince specified something restful, beside water.

What resulted was a two-story building in Korean style, with fluted tile roofs, overlooking the lake. There are pheasants and cuckoos and lengthy woodland walks for the prince and his Maltese poodle, Miki.

The "assembly hall" where Mr. Kim is to be found much of the time, off the beech-lined avenue that leads back into the city, is a massive granite and marble structure that looks more like an airport terminal. It is ringed by troops, and diplomats say there are signs that Mr. Kim rarely sleeps there, shifting from place to place on short notice.

With all their differences, the

In the chandelier-lighted dining room, the prince says, chuck-ling: "Not much here that's prole-tarian, is there? More like the lifestyle of a millionaire!"

The prince is treated as a head of state Since 1982 he has been nominal head of a government-inexile, this time contesting the Vietnamese occupation that supplanted the Khmer Rouge rule in

The Khmer Rouge, with China's backing, is the strongest element in the alliance. This places the prince in harness with men who locked him up in his own palace, slaughtered part of his family and, he believes, killed "about two million" Cambodi-

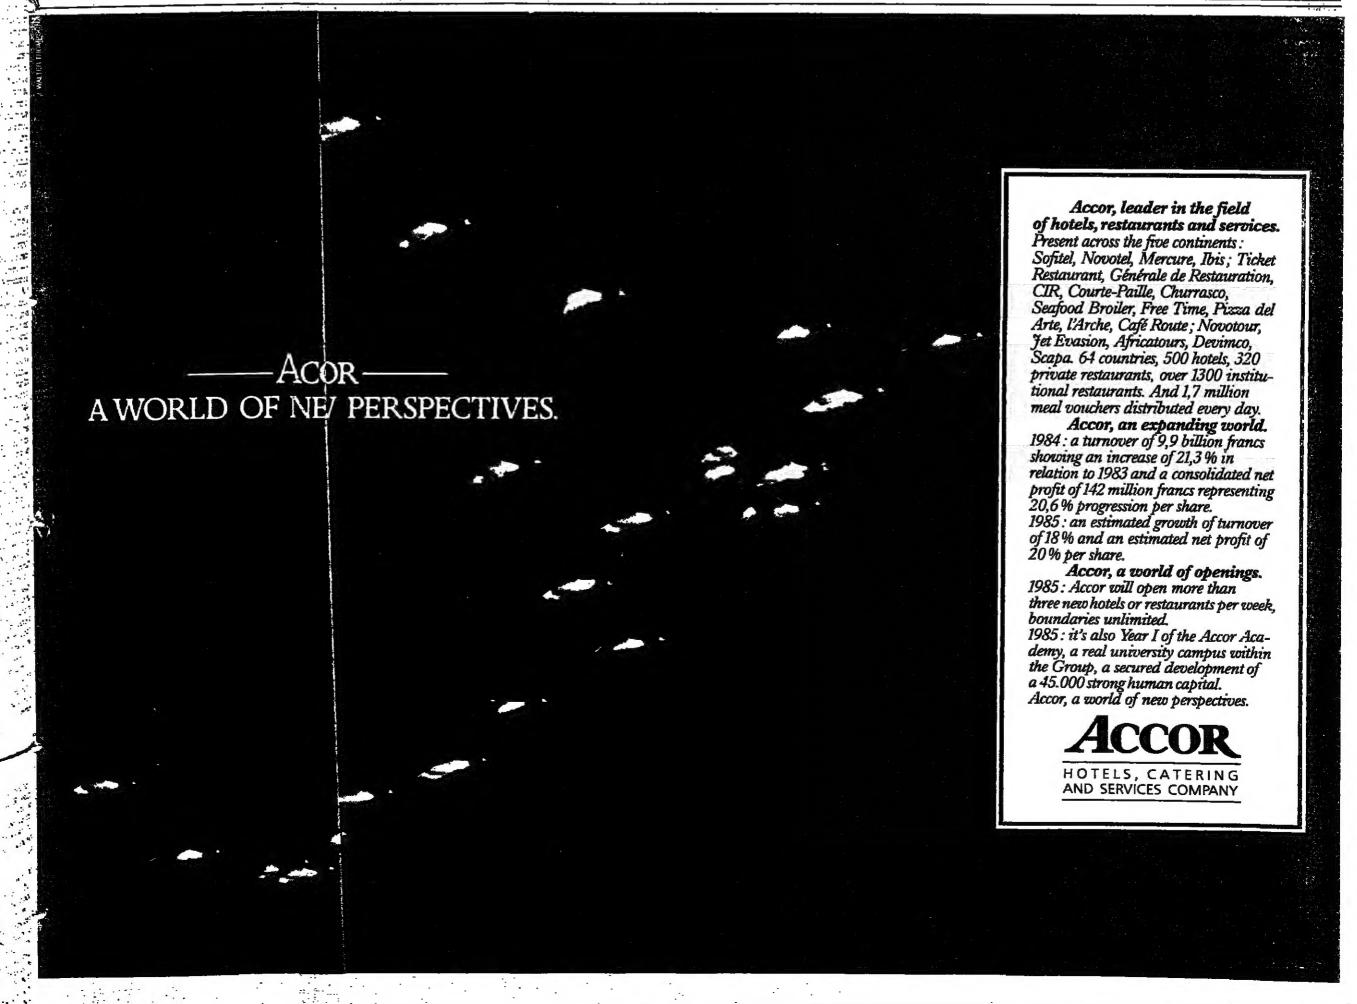

It is an association that disturbs many old friends of the prince, and one that is not easy for Mr. Kim to accept, either. Habitually careful to balance his ties with Moscow and Beijing, the North Korean leader has been squarely on Beijing's side on the Cambodian issue. Lately, he has shown signs of edging away from the Khmer Rouge, but according to the prince, Mr. Kim has never tried to influence him politically Why, then, does the Korean leader make such extravagant ef-forts on the prince's behalf? Diplomats here say they believe that Mr. Kim may have been influenced by a desire to increase his prestige in the non-Commu-nist world, but the prince says this underestimates his host's generosity. Similarly, he denies that the reason he has been spending more time lately in Pyongyang than Beijing, where he has another mansion, is because he resents the inflexible Chinese commitment to the Khmer Rouge. The real reason, he says, is that the environment in Pyongyang is quieter, more conducive to writing his memoirs and to guarding his health. But an outsider walking through the eery midday quiet of the mansion wonders privately how happy he can be in this remore place, linked to the more sophisticated world he cherished the shortwave broadcasts of the BBC and the Voice of Ameri-

As though sensing his visitor's thoughts, the prince says: "To understand Sihanouk, you have to know that I am an Asian man. I am a yellow man, not a white man. So I am guided by sentimental feelings, by feelings of grati-tude, and it is those that are most important to me. I will always be grateful to my hosts here, and in China, for giving me everything when everything was lost."

Fourteen pages bought by three private collectors give an idea of the splendor of this mutilated cript of the Shah Name, or Book of Kings, the 10th-century Persian epic by the poet Ferdowsi. The greatest represents King Keyo-mars seated "in the heart of the mountain" looking down on the circle of his standing subjects. Stylized clouds trail over the sky, painted a uniform gold to symbolize the light of divine glory that suffuses the world. Rocks and trees burst out beyond the rectangular frame. Cartouches of the text are inserted within the image. The proportions were worked out in relationship to the other side of the double page and to the general layout of the manuscript, creating a balance that has now been destroyed. The cardboard mounts that frame the page, as they do all the other miniatures, reduce the width of the gold-specked margins. It is not necessary to be a specialist to be disturbed by this distortion or dazzled, despite everything, by the calligraphic outlines and by the dancing rhythm of the figures.

While no other manuscript in the Geneva show, and very few elsewhere, can match this, the exhibition does include one other book of considerable importance, last seen in the 1931 Exhibition of Persian Art in London. It contains part of a "Universal History" written by the Vizier Rashid ad Din and copied and illuminated at Tabriz in the early 14th century. The horizontal atures combine the monumental figures inherited from a tradition that goes back to pre-Islamic fresco painting, with the first at-tempts at introducing landscape elements under Far-Eastern influ-

Chinese Song painting. Despite the streaks of silver paint crudely addof the foreground, the landscape remains one of the highlights of miniature painting in the Middle East. It belonged to the Royal Asiatic Society of London until July 1980, when it was bought at Sotheby's by a Geneva collector.

This is also the first time that a few marvelous miniatures from Turkey and Islamic India have been exhibited. One is a beautiful figure of an angel, done in Istanbul in the manner of the Iranian painters from Tabriz who worked in the Ottoman royal atelier. At a Christie's sale in April 1979, its Iranian appearance induced the English cataloger to call it Persian.

What is perhaps the greatest poris writing a letter with four lines of at the bottom, telling us that it was painted by the famous calligrapher who also signed one of the minia-tures in the Book of Kings.

Another major work is a minia-ture by the Iranian artist from Shiraz. Abd os-Samad, who moved to India in about the same period. A Persian inscription of rare antobiographical content, not mentioned in the catalog, gives it extraordinary historic importance: "At the age of 75 when my pen had stopped working and my side had reached an extreme of weakness, this was sent as a keepsake . . . to my el-

A group of 16th- and 17th-century miniatures from Islamic India follows, making the Geneva show one of the most interesting exhibitions of Mogul painting in years. More revelations are to be found among the objets d'art. The eastern Iranian pottery from Neyshabur in Khorasan, decorated with calligra-phy in blackish-brown and red on white, ranks among the great cre-ations of early Islamic art, and four bowls and platters that illustrate the art at its highest had been un-Two bronze caskets with figura-

The caskets, equally typical of Khora-san in every aspect of style and technique, are attributed to "Punjab or Hindustan," which is unlikely; we know nothing about metalwork in India at that time. A ewer with cylindrical body on three legs, typical of eighth-century Iran, is characterized as "Egypt . . . 9th, 10th century." A bronze door knocker, acquired in southern Iran with a Persian signature that the cataloger could not fully read, is not from "Iraq, Iran or Eastern Anatolia" but obviously from

Its characters are old enough to enjoy the first flushes of prosperity, but still sufficiently youthful to keep their self-absorption intact. Soon enough, they will have to give up their late-night carousing at a favorite bar and move on to more responsible lives. In the film's terms, which are distinctly limited, this will mean finding a more sedate hangout and going therefor brunch. "St. Elmo's Fire" has seven attentiongetting stars. As director, Joel Schumacher's hardest job is apportioning them equal time. When the storyets in the way of this, it is simply jettisoned. Rob-Lowe's pretty-boy ne'er-do-well is more or less the central figure. The most unusual actor is Emilio Estevez, whose pugnacionsness is so crazily intense it lends: itself to comedy. Judd Nelson's self-importance occasisionally gives way to some welcome humor. Andrew McCarthy does very well as an aspiring writer who's the easygoing iconoclast of the group. Nelson once again commands the screen with effortlessly stellar authority as a country music superstar who has lost all patience with and control over the business side of his career. "Songwriter" has a free-spirited vitality that goes a long way toward overcoming its sloppiness.

Many of the men was killed by the natives. About 50 fear-vivors built a raft, but two men stayed behind rather than risk a crossing on such an uncertain ves-sel. The raft disappeared. The two men survived on Vanikoro for 30 years, during which time no European ship approached the island.

delightful surprise. "Aditi" is at once an exhibition of high-grade Indian painting and sculpture and a living evocation of Indian village life. Orchestras strike up. Dancers dance. Child acrobats turn themselves inside out.

Puppets act out their stories. Jewelers, carvers, weavers, toymakers go about their business. Almost life-size mock horses canter to and fro, and a licensed saboteur or resident clown is encouraged to bring chaos wherever there is order. All this has been concerted, directed and designed by a young Indian designer, Rajeev Sethi.

How far what we see in "Aditi" duplicates what can be seen in any iven Indian village is a matter for discussion. The important thing is that Sethi has a rare gift not only for presentation but for the handing of the living human beings who make the show such a delight There is no regimentation, no "Aditi can be seen through schedule, no set program. poisterous and unfeigned high spirits that visitors clearly find conta-gious. Doubtless it helps that many of them perform great feats of skill and agility and that the craftsmen are very good at what they do. Indians have an inborn distinction that is heightened when they are doing something that is rooted in the Indian past and has been brought down to us intact. But their activity has to be concerted. They have to have enough space not to fall over one another. We must never know what to expect next. There must be noisy places, but there must be quiet places, too. All this calls not only for stage-management of a high or-der but for delicate insights into human nature. Sethi excels in both these respects, and "Aditi" gives visitors a wonderful time. (The levcl of sales at the gift shop would alone be proof of that.) "Aditi can be seen through July

A Sampling of London's 250 Exhibitions

By Max Wykes-Joyce LONDON — A sampling of some of the 250 exhibitions currently in London: At the Odette Gilbert Gallery is the first one-man show of Alfred Whiteley, 57, who until two years ago was an art teacher in a school. His work is of a genre beloved by the English: literary painting, elegantly portraying a complex dream world, without the fripperies of Surrealism, where "Pandora's Box" is a case full of tropical butterflies and where in "The Painted Ceiling" a mother watches over her deeping child while two men construct a golden calf. This is a remarkable debut by a visionary art-made from 1900 to 1940. "Paintings, Gouaches, Watercolors and Drawings by Pierre Bonnard (1867-1947)," JPL Fine Art, 24 Da-vies Street, W1, through July 5.

At the Alan Jacobs Gallery, Kate de Rothschild is mounting her annual exhibition of about 40 major Old Master drawings, including work by Salvator Rosa, Francesco Pirenesi Gierphattiste, Timedo, showing present works by John Piranesi, Giambattista Tiepolo, showing recent works by John Luca Giordano, Hubert Robert, Craxton, some of which were seen François Boucher and Rembrand: earlier in the year in Crete, where One notable item is a pen, ink and the artist now lives for most of the chalk drawing, "The Worship of year, and at the British Council's the Cross," by Pietro Testa (1611- gallery in Athens, Born in 1922,

At the Mercury Gallery is the second one-woman show of the Scottish painter Carol Ann Sutherland, whose colorful and quirkish images much attracted my atten-tion at her debut in 1983. Instead of the usual catalog, the council has allowed Greenwood to produce an essay explaining his choices, accompanied by two folders of color repro-ductions. Too many of his choices are dreary oldsters like Francis Bacon, the knockabout comics Gilbert & George, and Henry Moore, but among the young he has lighted upon winners in the sculptor Nicola Hicks (b. 1960), the draftsman Julian Grater (b. 1959) and the col-

U.S. Nearing the Brink Of Foreign-Trade Disaster

By LEONARD SILK New York Times Service

EW YORK — What can be done about the yawning United States trade deficit, which reiched a record $123 billion last year and is rising still figher this year? Under mounting pressure from a hole of industries, ranging from autos and steel to textiles, electrosics and lumber that have seen their markets and jobs shrink, Congress has been urging the administration to adopt a more agressive made policy.

Mexico Devalues Peso 33%

Official Rate Is Set Afloat

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatche

MEXICO CITY — The Mexican government effectively devalued the peso Friday by 33 percent by raising its official exchange rate to compete with private exchange houses that give American tourists more than 300 pesos for their dol-

Analysts said the government, which did not want to announce a peso devaluation before its July 7 elections, was quietly acknowledging the black market in pesos and letting its state banks enter the free market instead of trading the Mexican currency at an official exchange rate.

"It's a clever way to regain con-trol of the exchange market with-out having to announce a devalua-tion," one analyst said.

Private traders had been buying dollars at up to 310 pesos, and selling them for some 325 pesos.
Until Friday, banks, which are all government-owned, were required to operate at the standard rate, which this week was at roughly 245 pesos to the dollar.

Bank officials, after a meeting Thursday, decided to open trading Friday at the uncontrolled rate offered by the private exchange houses, which is some 33 percent higher than the figure the banks were forced to follow.

The move was seen as an attempt to stop customers from taking undue advantage of the lower, controlled bank rates. American tourists typically sold their currency at the free rate, while Mexicans drained dollars out of the state-run banks at the controlled rate.

The decision included the abolishment of exchange houses inside the Mexico City International Air-port where, previously, anyone with a plane ticket could buy dollars at well below the uncontrolled private rate, according to one re-

Analysts said the devaluation was forced in part by Mexico's efforts to make payments on its forcign debt, now at $97.5 billion, and by the reduction last week of heavy il prices for export, which will cost Mexico $520 million a year.

The peso has undergone two major devaluations in the past three more difficult for Ted Turner to stock to get control of a company, years and currently is devalued daily at a rate of 21 centavos. There are 100 centavos to a peso. In Laredo, Texas, International

Bank of Commerce was buying pesos Thursday at 320 to the dollar, while Texas Commerce Bank in McAllen, had an exchange rate of 317 to one.

Joe Carrizales Jr. of the Valuta exchange house in El Paso, Texas, which was buying at 313 to the dollar Thursday, said there had been a large demand for American Indeed, Lehman's old trading and money-management opera-tions, most of which remain relatively autonomous, have thrived in the recent bull markets, making the acquisition price of $380 million seem cheap. Shearson has also jumped into the first ranks of underwriters.

Although Lehman was only the latest in a string of 18 acqui-sitions that have been the building blocks for today's firm, Peter

A. Cohen, Shearson's chief exec-utive, did not hesitate to call it "our best deal." For the first time in years, he said, he is not on the prowl for more acquisitions. We have all the resources in place now to do what we want."

Even the announcement that Sanford I Weill, the man who built Shearson and then became president of American Express, will be leaving, was not expected to blow Shearson off course. Mr. Weill's assignments had taken him away from Shearson and left Mr. Cohen in command.

But Shearson Lehman's future remains cloudy. Some of its key investment bankers have left, and more are expected to leave in two more years when the con-tracts they signed not to join competitive firms expire. A weakening of the investment banking operations could be critical. Shearson would like to use its abilities there as a fulcrum to tilt its emphasis away from its low-margin retail distribution and brokering businesses toward higher-margin operations in which it would act as a principal.

"The challenge is not to re-create Lehman Brothers, but to create something entirely new," said Peter J. Solomon, formerly at Lehman and now vice chairman and co-director of the in-vestment bank. "We have not

Japan Reports Another Large Trade Surplus

TOKYO — Another large monthly trade surplus was anmonthly trade surplus was almounced by Japan on Friday as officials put the finishing touches on a package of measures to try to contain growth.

The Finance Ministry said that Japan sold the rest of the world

$4.28 billion more in goods than it bought in May, a huge jump from the $2.99-billion trade surplus in May last year.

Exports in the month rose to $14,23 billion from $14.09 billion a year earlier, but lower oil prices helped push imports down to $9.95 billion from $11.10 billion.

The latest figure brought Japan's trade surplus for the first five months of the year to $17.29 bil-lion, almost 20 percent higher than in the same period in 1984. Japan's export successes and a perception that its market is not completely open to imports has triggered widespread complaints from the United States, Europe and its Asian neighbors. Many countries are preparing measures to curtail the flow of Japanese goods and preserve jobs in industries at home that cannot compete with Japanese products. To counter such moves, Japan is assembling an "Action Program" designed to increase imports to bring trade more into balance. Government officials said details would be announced by the end of July.

On Thursday, Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone promised to take action to simplify customs procedures for goods entering Ja-pan. He has already pledged to cut or end tariffs on 1,800 items and said he hoped to announce measures to strengthen the yen, making Japan's goods more expensive Japan's current-account balance-of-payments surplus, which takes non-merchandise earnings such as services into account, also expanded in May, from $1.99 bil-tion in May 1984 to $3.58 billion.

So far, Shearson Lehman's fistellar, Operating revenues from in-vestment banking, consisting large-ly of the old Lehman firm, have wavered from $112 million in the second quarter of last year, the first after the merger, to $133 million in the fourth quarter of 1984, before tumbling to $110 million in this but to participate in them. year's first quarter.

At 134 years old, Lehman Brothers was Wall Street's oldest partnership and one of its most prestigious. Its heavily publicized merger was the product of internecine warfare that threatened to tear it apart.

When Shearson stepped in to buy the firm, it plucked out several divisions. These capital-markets divisions - under writing and trading a wide range of securities - have slid comfortably into the Shearson system, bolstered by bull markets. They have also retained some of market preferred's," a hybrid secupreferred stock.

Still, the investment bank has had its successes. Shearson Leh-man Brothers, for instance, was an adviser to Nabisco Brands in its $4.9-billion acquisition by R.J. Reynolds Industries.

The deal involved the classic for-mula of the traditional investment bank-client relationship. Andrew G.C. Sage 2d, a Lehman partner who stayed with the combined firm, sits on Nabisco's board. Mr. Sage had been on the board of Standard Brands before its union with Nahisco in 1981, for which Lehman was an adviser. And he will join the Reynolds board.

"If you can go into deals as a principal, rather than just a broker, the return is so much better," Mr. Cohen said. "That is where we see ourselves in the fature." Mr. Cohen also speaks of narrowing, not broadening, Shearson's retail busi-ness. Mr. Robinson, chairman of American Express, said that Shearson Lehman would work more closely with American Express International Banking Corp. in build-ing a stronger presence in interna-

Enserch Plans

To Reduce Assets

New York Times Service NEW YORK — Enserch Corp., affected by falling oil and gas prices, has announced that it will write down its assets by about $225 million before taxes in the second quarter.

The company said Thursday that the write-down, to about $400 million, would be partly offset by an $85-million, aftertax gain from the public sale of about 15 percent of Enserch Exploration Partners Ltd., a limit ed partnership formed in April Some analysts believed the write-down would result in a second-quarter loss for the Dallas-based company. Enserch earned $14.8 million, or 16 cents a share, in the second quarter of 1984. The company declined to comment on this year's second quarter.

At RCA Corp., there was elation recently over the agreement to sell the Hertz car-rental business, which had been put on the block several years ago when it no longer seemed to fit with RCA's busine es. UAL Inc., the owner of United Airlines, saw Hertz as a fit, however, and agreed to buy it last week for $587.5 million.

Gulf & Western Industries and Wickes Cos. found a different kind of fit. As the big conglomerate pursued its divestment strategy, it was eager to sell its consumer and industrial groups. Wickes was willing to buy them for $1 billion.

"What is going on in the U.S. today are several trends causing a restructuring of all American business," Mr. Olenzak of Sun said. #### AT&T Wins Computer Contract

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Ameri can Telephone & Telegraph Co., which entered the crowded computer field only last year, has won a major contract from the National Security Agency that ultimately could be worth as much as $946 million.

Under the contract, confirmed Friday by the Defense Department, the giant commu-nications organization would provide as many as 250 of its new 3B line of super minicom-puters to the NSA, the largest ind most secret of the nation's intelligence agencies.

Neither AT&T nor the security agency would disclose how ew computers would be used. An agency spokesman, Mike Levin, would say only that the machines were for a "new purpose" and would in-volve "many units, spread out over a number of places."

The agency recently was assigned responsibility for com-puter security within the gov-

AT&T said it would get the full $946 million only if the agency exercises all the options in the contract, which extends through 1988. In winning the job, AT&T beat out a host of major computer makers, in-cluding International Business Machines Corp., Gould Inc. and Digital Equipment Corp.

"This is a very large procurement which we worked very hard on for more than a year, said Warren Corgan, the vice president in charge of AT&T's Federal Systems Division.

White House Under Pressure To Confront Trade Problems

as evidence of this. This week, in an effort to ward off such attacks, Japan announced that it was making a sweeping uni-lateral reduction on duties on 1,790 items to open its market wider to foreign products. But the U.S. trade difficulties, in the view of many economists, stem not just from the deeds of others but from the failings of the United States itself and its industries and labor. Low productivity growth and inadequate rates of investment in the making are blamed as the underlying causes of declining United States competitiveness in many fields. Whatever the problems of individual industries, two major macroeconomic problems are disturbing the trade position of U.S. industry: the overvalued dollar and the more rapid rate of U.S. expansion compared to most other countries. The former puts U.S. prod-and the latter sucks imports into this country more rapidly. Both of these problems are proving tough nuts to crack. The dollar has held up, partly because the United States budget deficit remains high and this country has vance in 1983 and the first half of 1984, but the trade problem has not yet eased.

An ancient proverb holds that the fox knows many things, but the hedgehog knows one big thing. The one big thing that has dominated United States trade policy since the war — the concept of free trade — appears to be giving way to the belief that the United States now must do many things if it is to rescue itself from a foreign trade disaster. A more aggressive and diverse United States trade policy is

T HE Latino poet is supposed to have — is almost required to have — a place in politics, a role in diplomacy, a stake in the hurly-burly of temporal events. No contemporary Latino poet has lived the political part more knowingly or indepen-dently than Octavio Paz, the Mexican-born septuagenarian who fuses the study of language, history, government and art in a world view free of superpower prejudices or theocratic certainties.

Here are essays of the immediate, some of them written for Spanish-language newspapers, some of them new, all of them celebrating human freedom as opposed to manufactured ideology. "Ideology," Paz writes, "converts ideas into masks: They hide the person who wears them, and at the same time they keep him from seeing reality."
He offers aid, but little comfort, to the United States. He offers explanation, but no support, for Marxist-Leninist regimes: "Not a few European and Latin American intellectuals attempt to equate the policy of the United States with that of the Soviet Union, as though they were twin monsters. Hypocrisy, naïvetè or cynicism? It seems to me that what is monstrous is the comparison itself. The errors, the failures and the sins of the United States are enormous, and I am not trying to absolve that nation." Paz goes on to criticize the United States, Western democracies and Japan for incoherent policies, for blindness to the social problems in less developed nations and for being the accomplices of brutal dictatorships.

"All this having been said, however," he contin-ues, "it must be added that the capitalist democracies have preserved fundamental freedoms within their own borders. On the other hand, ideological war abroad and totalitarian despotism at home are the two constituent features of the Soviet regime and its vassal countries."

The trouble with the United States, he suggests, is a two-faced approach to the world — one inside expression for its citizens, another outside appearance in dealing with other nations. The United States is, internally, a democracy, and its people enjoy the freedoms attached to a changing society.

> Art Seidenboum is on the staff of the Los Angeles formula is in fact a weakness, is the absence of Paz—translate peace—proposals to cure what ails humanity. The poet's solution, logically, is language and discussion: "Dialogue keeps us from denying ourselves and from denying the humanity of the adversary." The trouble with that solution is the presumption that both sides of a struggle want to talk. Look at Geneva, right now. Listen for dialogue and hear vilification instead.

Hinault Wins Tour Prologue

Bretons Cheer Favorite Son as France's Big Race Begins

PLUMELEC. France — Sixty thousand Bretons turned out Friday to cheer Bernard Hinault, the region's favorite son each summer. He did not disappoint them.

Setting off next to last in the 180-man prologue to the 72d Tour de France bicycle road race, Hinault overtook much of the field that, in 14-minute intervals, had left one-by-one before him. He won Casily.

"We've started in the right direc-

A mighty cheer went up, sirens blared and the black and white flag of Brittany flew as Hinault crossed the finish line. His time for the 6.8kilometer (just over 4-mile) race was 8 minutes 47.4 seconds.

The next best time, 8:51.59, was turned in nearly half an hour earlier by Eric Vanderaerden of the Pana-sonic team. "I can do that too," Hinault remembered thinking as he started off in pursuit of his fifth victory in the Tour de France.

Third in the prologue to the 4,000-kilometer tour was Stephen Roche of the Redoute team, with Phil Anderson of Panasonic fourth and Greg LeMond of Hinault's La Vie Claire team finishing fifth. All were timed in more than nine min-

"The public gave me a lot of joy," Hinault said of the throngs of spectators along the course. "This support really shows their interest Hinault, 30, was being modest. Since he arrived two days ago, bicyand Anquetil a decade earlier.

Hinault has been the man to beat since he first started in the Tour de France in 1978. He won that year and in 1979, 1981 and 1982. Ten-dinitis in his left knee forced him to withdraw while he was leading the 1980 tour and the same ailment kept him out of the 1983 race.

After an operation, he returned last year to finish second to Lau-rent Fignon, who himself was kept out of this year's race by surgery for tendinitis in his left Achilles ten-

Fignon, 24. was a speciator Friday afternoon in Plumelec, a vil-lage comprised of a handful of stores, a church and a circuit of well-kept roads that is often used for bicycle races, including last year's French national championship. As he said beforehand, Hinault knows the course well.

Mostly he knows the people and their feeling for him. Sporting a broad, confident grin, he mounted the victor's podium and was presented with an armful of flowers, then both cheeks twice by a beauty queen and next the yellow jersey. that had just arrived in the embrace of a parachutist. How they did cheer when Hinault launched the flowers into the crowd.

Hinault continued to be the best sports as he was deluged with other facets of the tour's commercial ballyhoo: a plush lion symbolizing a banking sponsor, a small flag celebrating a builder of vaca-tion bones and, finally, a can of Coca-Cola. He took a quick sip of the soft drink before thrusting it to an official.

Coca-Cola, this year, has replaced Perrier as the official drink of the Tour de France, ending rather controversially 52 years of sponsorship by the French mineral water producer. To some the change has been regarded as a sign of the race's internationalization, but to others it is yet another example of American cultural imperialism.

Wicked souls insist the change was made to encourage interest in the race in the United States since, according to this theory, Coca-Cola will sponsor a weekly series of U.S. television programs about the race. Officials of Columbia Broadcasting System, which is filming the programs, deny this. In any case the Tour de France has changed. No rider henceforth like that."

Aouita, Cram Speed to Victory in Oslo

OSLO (AP) — Olympic champion Said Aouita of Morocco ran the world's second fastest 5,000-meter race and world champion Steve Cram of Great Britain recorded the third fastest 1,500 meters on Bislett Stadium's new super-fast synthetic track Thursday night.

Aouita registered 13:04.52 and Cram turned in a 3:31.34 in outclassing their opposition in the international Oslo Games track and field meet.

Despite running in thunder and rain, Aouita bettered his previous personal best of 13:04.78; the world record of 13:04.42 was set by David Moorcroft of Great Britain on July 7, 1982, in Bislett Stadium.

Cram defeated Steve Scott of the United States and a dozen other top

Pondering the Value of a Human Life

By William R. Greet

Vew York Times Service
YEW YORK — When a construction crane fell on Brigitte Gerney last month as she walked along Manhattan's Third Avenue, pinning her for six hours, the city leaped into action. Hundreds of police officers rerouted traffic throughout the Upper East Side. Two cranes were brought from other boroughs to lift the one that had fallen. Doctors from Bellevue Hospital set up a mobile hospital at the construction site. Emergency Service rescue workers risked their lives to save hers. Once she was freed, police halted traffic for 30 blocks to speed her trip to the emergency room.

No city official questioned how much the rescue effort cost, or whether saving Gerney's life was worth the price. "There's no point where you say that's too expen-sive," said Lieutenant Thomas Fahey, speaking for the New York City Police Department.

Yet putting a price tag on hu-man life is common among life insurance companies, airlines. courts, industries and agencies. The U.S. government routinely calculates the value of a life, having been required to do so by law: Executive Order 12291, issued by President Ronald Reagan in February 1981. Ordinary citizens make much the same determination, albeit unconsciously, when they choose small cars over large ones, take jobs hundreds of feet below ground for higher pay, or buy inexpensive houses in a flood

The fact that there are these prices put on human life, and the processes for making such valuations and the ways in which the results are used, raise questions about the society: Is this necessary? What are the etnical and moral considerations? Given the answers, where does human life stand in society's scheme of things?

People have been calculating the worth of their lives and the lives of others for as long as archaeologists, anthropologists and historians can document human

"It may be thought to be an aberration of our own institutional values, but it's not at all unique in the course of humankind." said Kenneth Korey, an anthropolo-

Dowd Suter/The New York Times

gist at Dartmouth College in New Hampshire. "In tribal and band societies, for example, we find indemnification for the loss of a life that involves property transfers. How else can those groups set straight the fabric of the society when it is distressed by the disorder of a murder?" The Aztecs created an elaborate system of compensation for injuries and deaths; so did the Code of Hammurabi of ancient Babylonia. In ancient and medieval law, a composition, or sum of money, was paid by a guilty party to satisfy the family of the person he injured or killed. In Old English, "wergild," meaning "man's price," referred to the amount paid to the king, who had lost a subject: to the lord of the manor. who had lost a vassal; and to the family of the deceased.

But there is a fundamental difference, many social scientists say, between calculating the value of a life to compensate for its loss, and determining whether it is worth saving, a practice growing more common.

"We cannot argue that in our society human life has gained in value or that we cherish life more than primitive people did," said Robert Zeitlin, an archaeologist at Brandeis University in Wal-tham, Massachusetts. "I think, looking back at our society thousands of years from now, people will regard some of the things we do with absolute horror, the fact that we knowingly allow people to die from environmental hazards,

Some philosophers say the val-ue of human life is infinite or incalculable, "Individual human beings are utterly irreplaceable," said Daniel Callahan, director of the Hastings Center, a nonprofit research and educational organization devoted to ethical issues in medicine and biology.

However, insurance agents, economists, legal experts, scien-tists and agency administrators assign life values ranging from a few dollars to many millions of dollars, depending on the formulas used.

One way of figuring value is to break down the body into chemical elements — 5 pounds of calci-um, 1½ pounds of phosphorus, 9 ounces of potassium. 6 ounces of sulfur. 6 ounces of sodium, a little more than 1 ounce of magnesium and less than an ounce each of iron, copper and iodine. Harry Monsen, an anatomy professor at the University of Illinois Medical School in Chicago, said that, on that basis, a human life is worth $8.37, up $1.09 in six years because of inflation.

the going price of contract mur-der. Andreas Santiago Hernan-dez, 22, recently told the Los Angeles Police Department that he was paid $5,000 to kill Lorraine Keiler, the 67-year-old widow of a San Fernando Valley executive.

The life-insurance industry determines what people would have earned had they lived. "What is the economic value of an individual?" said Robert Waldron, director of the New York office of the American Council of Life Insurance. "It's their earning power over the course of their working life. It's unsentimental but it's fairly straightforward."

Lee S. Kreindler, a lawyer who since 1952 has been representing the victims of airplane crashes and their families, says his formula is specified by law. But the law varies from state to state. In Georgia, for example, people are worth what they would have earned, while in New York they are worth what they would have contributed to their family. "A 35-year-old man, killed in a crash, is unmarried but was making a great amount of money," Kreindler said. "That's a small ase in New York, but a huge case in Georgia."

Kreindler said crash victims families can expect to recover $300,000 to $500,000, with a few cases in the millions. Insurance experts say that in the case of the Air-India jetliner that went down Sunday, many passenger claims against the airline would be limited to a maximum of $100,000 under the Montreal Convention, an international treaty, but that there was no limitation in claims against the aircraft's manufactur-tween $400,000 and $7 million the choice, agency officials say, is arbitrary — with the average be-ing "around $1 million or $2 million," according to John M. Campbell, the deputy assistant administrator for policy. The Oc-cupational Safety and Health Administration uses a scale of $2 million to $5 million.

Federal officials argue that these computations make economic sense: It helps them decide which regulations will protect the most people for the least amount of money. "We haven't got infi-nite resources," said Edwin L. Dale Jr., a spokesman for the Office of Management and Budget.
"If it would cost an industry $800 million of remedial action to save one life, then it would only take 1,000 lives before they would use one-fifth of the GNP." W. Kip Viscusi, an economist at Duke University in North Carolina who directed the Council on Wage and Price Stability in the Carter administration, supports the government's use of the "willingness to pay" approach: An economist looks at how much money employees must be paid to accept a certain level of risk in their jobs; the economist can then calculate the value employees place on their lives. If, for example, a certain job carries a fatality risk of one in every 10,000 workers in a year and workers are willing to face that risk for $300 in additional pay, then that group values one of its members' lives at $300 times 10,000 workers, or $3

Viscusi figures that the average blue-collar worker puts a $3-million to $3.5-million price tag on a life. Workers in high-risk indus-uries such as mining and oil-rig drilling, where the death risk is I in 1,000, value life at about $600,000, he said, and white-collar workers, who are much less willing to accept the risk of fatalities in their relatively safe jobs. price it at $7 million to $10 mil-

The issue for Viscusi is not whether to perform such calculations, but how the answers are used. "The alternative," he said, is to pull values out of the air and not make the public aware of what the trade-off is between money and risk on the job." He added: "We always have to get back to the fundamental trade-off between money and risk, because

Court Overturns Award To Ex-Anchoricoman

A federal appeals court in Kansas City, Missouri, overturned on Friday a jury award of $325,000 to Christine Craft, the former TV anchorwoman who contended she was demoted because her bosses did not like her age or locks. The court also ruled in favor of Metromedia Inc. on Craft's allegations of sex discrimination and equal-pay violations. Dennis Egan, one of Craft's lawyers, said he would file a motion for a rehearing with the appeals court and failing that, might go to the U.S. Supreme Court Craft, now 40, was removed as anchorwoman in August 1981. She sued Metromedia, saying the news director told her that research indicated viewers found her "too old, too unattractive and not deferential enough to men." The news director denied having made such a remark, In 1983, a U.S. District Court jury awarded Craft $500,000. The amount was lowered in a second trial to $325,000.
